

Behind the Win: Computerworld's Best Places to Work in IT

The MasterCard Operations Command Center in St. Louis

IDG Computerworld announced its 2014 Best Places to Work in IT list, and MasterCard's name appeared near the top! Not only did we receive the #3 ranking among medium-sized companies; we took home the #6 spot among all 100 honorees for employee benefits.

The Computerworld "Best Places to Work in IT" award is a significant national recognition. It is a testament to the work done across the company to make MasterCard a great place to work. "As we position ourselves to our key stakeholders as a technology company, it's recognition like this award that helps reinforce that in a very positive way," says Rob Reeg, president, Operations and Technology. "Obviously, it's a honor to receive this recognition – but I'm even more proud of the positive attitude MasterCard employees bring to the office every day, that truly makes this a great place to work."

In order to be considered for inclusion in the Best Places to Work in IT, Computerworld conducts a comprehensive evaluation of employee benefits, career development, training opportunities and work-life balance. In addition, an employee survey, conducted by a third-party, weighs heavily in the evaluation and final placement on the list.

"I'm really pleased to see MasterCard receive this award," says Ron Garrow, chief human resources officer. "When people are researching companies and considering where to start or continue their technology careers, recognition like this goes a long way to positioning us at the top of the list of preferred companies. It's another way to help us continue to attract and retain very talented employees who are working to help us achieve MasterCard 3.0."

Congratulations to everyone on this important recognition and honor!
