On April 23, our company's Chief Financial Officer Martina Hund-Mejean was honored by the Financial Women's Association as this year's Woman of the Year for the Private Sector. Martina was recognized alongside the FWA's Public Sector Honoree, Vicki Fuller, chief investment officer, New York State Common Retirement Fund.

Established in 1956, the Financial Women's Association brings together professionals from every sector of the financial world. The organization is dedicated to developing future leaders, enhancing the role of women in finance and investing in the community.

Martina and her fellow honoree were acknowledged for their achievements and exceptional leadership, setting an inspiring example for others to follow. Martina was also recognized for giving back and laying the foundation for students at the University of Virginia's Darden Business School through a scholarship established with her husband, Bruno Mejean, in addition to the Bernard Mejean Scholarship created to support under privileged female youth in Morocco.

In her remarks that evening, Martina recognized her family and colleagues, such as long-time executive assistant Barbara Griggs, for their contributions to her success. She also lauded companies like MasterCard and Prudential Financial: "... both companies are extremely focused on having an inclusive workforce on all levels within the organization that also represent our customers that we serve ...". In her closing statement, she reminded everyone that we need to tell our girls and young women that there are great places to go to with fantastic opportunities in financial services.
